Overgrowth of Clostridioides difficile:

(C. Diff is a bacteria that is labeled a “super bug.” All this means is that it is caused by the overuse of antibiotics in our culture and cannot be killed with anti-biotics as it is resistant to them through micro-evolution. C. Diff runs rampant historically in hospitals and can often be seeded in the gut during a time of surgery or even from a visit to a loved one in a hospital. It also is a pandemic in factory (CAFO) farms as anti-biotics are violently abused in the husbandry of our meat/poultry supply. It is an anti-biotic resistant super bug. Ironically it’s conventionally addressed using MORE antibiotics to bring it under control. But obviously, being that C. Diff is an anti-biotic resistant super bug, any additional antibiotics can further weaken the gut microbiome and immune system even further - so it’s counterintuitive. To rebalance the gut microbiome and prevent a future reoccurrence of C. Diff overgrowth, it’s best to use herbal methods so as to not decimate beneficial bacteria in your the gut microbiome but rather being down the levels of C. Diff and build up a healthy community of strong beneficial bacteria to fight off C. Diff in the future. Garlic does this expertly as well as boosting stomach acid (HCl) to prevent reoccurrence.)
